This, and a host of other vigorous and unhesitating assertions make up the speech—not a word being weighed for the occasion, or a metaphor sought for embellishment, yet neither is wauting in its purest and most attractive significance. Thus much for the stalwart and indefatigable Senator from Wisconsin. Not a few of the multitude that daily throng the gallery, have learned to think that this persistent confidence in the award of the people, and reiterated determination to abide that decision, whatever of failure and disappointment it may have in store, is already indicative of a victory over half the battle.

young, rich and poor, men, women and children; widows and orphans; all ages, sexes, sizes and conditions; Union men and secessionists—it made no difference to him, all were alike fair game for the bloody-thirsty and avaricious tyrant. To have money or something else that he or his friends wanted was crime enough, and immediately the unfortunate was branded with disloyalty, and either sent to death or into gloomy exile. And this man, spotted all over, from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet, with the foul leprosy of crime-more infamous than the Calibans of fancy or the Borgias of history—in comparison with whom Nero was a gentleman and Cali-gula a saint; this vile, bloated, beastly, loathsome, festering wretch still lives and breathes, and walks about on God's green earth, to boast of his villanies! It is a crying shame—a libel upon justice—a disgrace to the Government that permits it! We are gratified to see the stand taken by the Grand Jury of McCracken. We hope that Governor Bramlette will do his duty. But we doubt if anything will come of it. Kentucky is powerless a the present time. Her voice is weak—her arm is paralized. But the thunders of Heaven will not sleep forever. Punishment is still in store for the wretch who has weatenly violated every law. who has wantonly violated every law, haman and divine. Sylla rioted in the blood of his fellow citizens and walked with his harlots about the public streets of Rome, unscathed of the law; but his flesh turned to maggots and rotted from his bones; he stunk above the ground and perished miserably—a warning to all evil doers. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord; I will repay!"

Nicknames. Victor Hugo, in his last novel, the "Toilers of the Sea," speaks of the fondness of Americans for conferring nicknames upon their celebrated men. He names upon their celebrated men. He illustrates it as follows: "You call your famous Missouri banker, Thomas Benton, 'Old Lingot;' "Seward, who introduced the small bank notes, 'Little Billy,' "'Clay, The Miller's Boy with a Scar.' "As to Winfield Scott, as his first thought after beating the English at Chippewa, was to sit down to dine, you call him Quick, a Basin of Soup."

Mr. Clay was called the "Mill Boy of the Slashes," but as the "Slashes" was the name of the place where he exercised his vocation, they were not of the sort to produce "a scar." It is rather hard to call Mr. Benton, the deadly enemy of all banking, a "banker," and to suppose the author of our voluminous diplomatic correspondence an issuer of "small notes." Gen. Scott took his "hasty plate of soup" long subsequent to the war with England, and we do not remember that any one, even during his heated canvass for the Presidency, ever hailed him with the euphonius appellation of Quick-a basin of soup Scott.

Jeff Davis' Early Love Troubles. Prairie du Chien. Davis, when a lieutenant in the United States army, eloped with The Character of the Men who Indicted the daughter of ex-President Taylor, then a colonel in command of our forces at a colonel in command of our forces at Fort Crawferd. Here was Davis' first secession exploits! He loved the hand-some daughter of Col. Taylor. That love was returned. Col.
